uncertain, and may prove to be materially different from that assumed. early adjudication of water rights on all projects where such adjudication has not yet been made, and that, pending such action, expenditure be kept within the probable rights of the United States.

Surplus of Stored Water.

"On some projects there is a surplus of stored water which could be advantageously sold if that course were authorized by law. Legislation with this object in view is now pending in Congress. If the sale of surplus water were authorized, certain proposed extensions to cover private land by means of pumping could well be left to private enterprise.

"In nearly all projects the land proposed to be irrigated will, with proper cultivation and treatment, bear the construction and operation and maintenance charges. In a few cases the payments will be burdensome. In the Garden City and Missouri river pumping projects it is asserted by the set tlers that the cost of pumping is prohibitive, but with better farming methods this condition may be changed. "Some complaint was made that the adopted sizes of farm units on public land were too small. These vary from ten acres on part of the Umatilla project to forty and eighty acres on most of the others. The size of the farm unit was fixed after consideration of the productiveness of the soil, the climate and the value of the crops that could be raised, the intention being to limit it to an area sufficient for the support of a family. In a few cases there appeared to be some justification for the complaints, but further experi-changes are made. "The actual cost of completed work has almost invariably exceeded the original estimates, and in the case of some structures has been two or three times as large. This increase in cost has been the cause of much of the dispartly due to a general increase in the cost of labor and materials, partly to underestimates and an insufficient allowance for contingencies, and partly to the necessity of doing more work han was originally contemplated."

The

Shannon & Luchs Renting Service

For Property Owners. Of great importance to the property owner is the agent's method of remitting collected rents. Slowness or inability to remit collections is more harmful than allowing tenants to lag in payments. It reveals an indifference that is some time going to cost the landlord money. A feature of the service we offer is the application of PERSONAL

ATTENTION constantly given the properties in our charge. A check for every collection is sent the landlord within an hour of receiv-No charge for listing vacant Office, 713 14th St. N.W.
